PRESS RELEASE

Stem Cells Show Promise in the treatment of frailty

BARCELONA, SPAIN, April 28, 2017. Stem cells from healthy young donors, delivered via intravenous infusion to frail older adults, were shown to reduce inflammation in a small pilot study reported today at the International Conference on Frailty and Sarcopenia Research (ICFSR). “These findings suggest that stem cells may have the potential to reverse some of the most debilitating effects of aging that result from chronic inflammation and a decline in immune function”, according to Joshua M. Hare, M.D., Chief Science Officer of Longeveron LLC and Director of the Interdisciplinary Stem Cell Institute at the University of Miami Miller School of Medicine.

Higher quality diets in mid-life improve physical performance in old age

BARCELONA, SPAIN, April 28, 2017. A study of over 900 older adults whose dietary patterns had been assessed multiple times over more than two decades showed that those with higher quality diets across the lifespan performed better on measures of physical function and mobility. Sian Robinson, PhD, professor of nutritional epidemiology at the University of Southampton, UK, said these results indicate that better nutrition in mid-life could help people maintain their quality of life and independence as they age.
