Health services must stop leaving older people behind

On the International Day of the Older Person – 1 October – WHO calls for a new approach to providing health services for older people. WHO highlights the role of primary care and the contribution community health workers can make to keeping older people healthier for longer. The Organization also emphasizes the importance of integrating services for different conditions.

An online app designed to streamline the process of Alzheimer's disease diagnosis

A student-led team of researchers at Washington University School of Medicine (WUSM) in St. Louis, Missouri, has developed an online app designed to streamline the process of Alzheimer's disease diagnosis. It provides physicians with more information about patients before they are evaluated in person, enabling physicians to assess and assist patients more quickly.
